and winds up by the agreeable assurance that if I come "from behind my non de plume," I am to have "the lie" (he never mentions what lie) "crammed down my lying throat."

Now, Sir, I would have you let Captain PARSON know that this wretched game of brag may not be quite so safe as he imagines. At present, my hands are tied by considerations having reference to the safety of many near and honored friends who are still within the clutches of Gen. WM. WALKER, and who would be made to suffer, if my agency in exposing that individual's villainies were known; but let the steamer, as I believe it soon will, bring the news of WALKER's utter overthrow and rout from the land he has usurped and desolated; let me be once assured of the safety of my friends, and then, depend on it, that no one will have to ask twice for the name of THE VOICE OF NICARAGUA.

P. S.—There is an insidious attempt in all these letters (Col. ANDERSON's alone excepted) to make it appear that I am hostile to the progress of American influence and institutions in Central America. Now, Sir, the very reverse is the fact; and it is directly because I know that American institutions can never be developed in Nicaragua while a man is at the head of the American Party there who sacrifices all considerations of public good and public honesty to the blind pursuit of his miserable and selfish dreams of autocratic and imperial sway,—it is for this reason, and this alone, that I have engaged in the unrecompensed task of exposing WM. WALKER's true designs and real character to the abhorrence of the American public. Let any other man—let Col. ANDERSON for example—be given the head there, and I will volunteer my services, as freely as I have done before, for the furtherance and establishment of a sound and Democratic Government, having the American element for its basis, prop and guide.

FROM LANCASTER.

Visit of Mr. Buchanan to Philadelphia—The New-York Appointments—The Meeting at the St. Nicholas Hotel.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

LANCASTER, Friday, Dec. 5.

Mr. BUCHANAN takes the cars to-morrow morning for Philadelphia. He will remain there several days. His visit will be less a business one than for the purpose of seeing his friends more conveniently than he is able to do at Wheatland. He stated, yesterday, in conversation with a gentleman from your City, that he had not yet given the subject of appointments in New-York any consideration whatsoever; nor should he begin to think of the matter at present.

It is understood here that a meeting has been held at the St. Nicholas Hotel, in New-York, of leading Democrats throughout the State, for the purpose of recommending Hon. EDWARD CORNING for the Secretaryship of the Treasury. This move will fail of success, as will every other to bring forward New-York candidates for place in the Cabinet. It would be in direct violation of long-established Democratic usage to put man in power from States that have gone largely against the President elected by the people.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Effect of the President's Message at Washington—Project of a Treaty with New-Granada—Reciprocity with the West Indies, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 5.

The President certainly has created a sensation by means of his Message, although not one of the most agreeable character. It continues to be denounced in the boldest language by men who stand high as leaders of the Democratic Party, and even some members of PIERCE's own Cabinet shrug their shoulders ominously when the subject is mentioned.

The friends of Mr. BUCHANAN, who had hoped that the sectional excitement of the last few months would die away before the 4th of March next, are firm in the conviction that PIERCE had the deliberate purpose of kicking up a row for the annoyance of his successor.

Postmaster CAMPBELL had assured his Pennsylvania friends that the Message would be very soothing in regard to Kansas and Slavery, and calculated to smooth the way for the new Administration. This he honestly supposed; but JEFFERSON DAVIS got the President's ear, and put the brimstone into his ink when CAMPBELL and MARCY were away.

The result is a Message over which DAVIS chuckles with irrepressible glee. Indeed, he is to-day the jolliest man in town. PIERCE, on the other hand, looks half scared at the crash he has caused, and CAMPBELL has been raving. On Tuesday, when the Message came out, and he ascertained its to him unexpected character, and that he had been permitted so seriously to mislead his Buchanan friends, he ripped and stormed "prodigious,"—so that it was seriously proposed to request him to resign. His symptoms are better now, and the patient is in a fair way to recover. The bare prospect of quitting the Cabinet was dist enough for him.

CAMPBELL's private opinion of the Message, however, is not complimentary to his Chief; and if the Cabinet had six months' life before it, I do not believe it would last in its present shape twenty-four hours. You will bear me witness that I have always heretofore maintained the perpetuity of the Cabinet against the rumors of dissolution so often current. I shall expect, of course, that this statement will be denied; but of its substantial accuracy I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. MARCY has drawn up the project of a treaty with New-Granada, which, substantially, Mr. MORAN, our special Commissioner, is to endeavor to negotiate at Bogota. Gen. HERRAN, who has seen the project, says that it is just, reasonable and honorable. Its general idea is that heretofore stated in my correspondence, although Mr. MARCY is not very particular whether the object of protecting the Transit route is accomplished by a cession to us of municipal control over the Isthmus, or by a specific grant to us of the right to maintain an armed police or military force there. Mr. MORAN is also instructed to procure an extension of the provisions agreed upon in this connection over three small islands lying in the bay of Panama, less than a mile from the shore, which belong to the Pacific Mail Steamship and the Panama Railroad Companies.

These islands lie in deep water, and the Companies named propose at sometime to connect them with each other and the mainland, and establish their depôts upon them. The connections can easily be formed, because of bars and reefs which run out toward them; and the improvement would afford a fine harbor, safe anchorage, and easy docking. The future importance of the islands can scarcely be overestimated.

The Secretary of the Navy transmitted orders, by to-day's California mail, to the commander of the U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur, directing him to proceed immediately to Panama for the purpose of vacating her old anchorage for a new one, the transfer to be made via the Panama Railroad, as has recently been ordered in the case of the St. Mary's. This change in the new mode of supplying the Pacific Squadron with men and stores, shows no well-deserved encomiums upon the head of Secretary DAVIS from all quarters and all parties.

A new project is on foot for the extension of the provisions of the Canadian Reciprocity Treaty to the British West Indies, whose trade is monopolized by Great Britain and her Colonies. The movement is certainly of vast importance. S.

The Action of the Virginia Electoral College—Ex-Governor Floyd Recommended for the Cabinet—Statement in Reference to Gov. Wise—Selection of a Site for the New-York Post-Office.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 5.

The Star confirms the report that the Virginia Electors had recommended Ex-Governor FLOYD for a post in Mr. BUCHANAN's Cabinet.

The Electors had quite a jubilee after casting the vote of the State. Gov. WISE was present. Many speeches were made and toasts drunk. One of the sentiments declared "the Cabinet Manifesto to be but the eternal law of Nature and of Nations—self-preservation—all honor to the statesman who will execute its principles." Governor WISE, in a speech, declared that nothing would tempt him to leave his present position in which the Democracy of Virginia had placed him. He also said that it was due to Virginia that some one of her distinguished citizens should be called to aid in carrying out its policy. Both these declarations were received with thunders of applause.

The Democratic members of Congress from Virginia strongly condemn the action of the members of the Electoral College of that State, in recommending Ex-Governor FLOYD for a position in Mr. BUCHANAN's Cabinet.

A fact, derived from undoubted authority, is that Mr. BUCHANAN has expressed a desire to have the benefit of Governor WISE's counsel, and has offered him any station within his gift, but the Governor has declined the tender thus made.

It has been decided by the President to purchase the Brick Church property in New-York, as the site for the Post-Office, for four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, provided a good title can be given.

XXXIVth Congress....Second Session.

The Senate was not in session yesterday, having adjourned over to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 5.

THE WHITFIELD CASE—MR. GROW'S MOTION LOST.

The House resumed the consideration of Mr. WHITFIELD's case.

Mr. PHELPS moved as a test question that there be a call of the House. He said, in reply to Mr. GIDDINGS, he was sure there was a majority of Mr. WHITFIELD's friends in the city, and his object was to have them all in the House.

The motion was agreed to by one majority. Two hundred and eighteen members answered to their names.

Mr. AKENS moved that gentlemen proceed to draw for the selection of seats. He being a new member, never had one, and, therefore, thought the request reasonable.

Mr. GROW objected.

The House voted on the pending question, viz.: Mr. GROW's motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House, on Monday, refused to consent that WHITFIELD be sworn as Delegate from Kansas. Decided in the negative, by one hundred and eight against one hundred and eleven.

It now being clearly ascertained that WHITFIELD's friends were in the majority, Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved the previous question.

Mr. GIDDINGS moved a call of the House, amid laughter and cries of "Good;" "Who's absent;" "What's the use of that;" and, "Let the Republicans now play the game commenced by the Democrats."

Mr. STANTON appealed to gentlemen to draw for seats.

A VOICE FROM THE DEMOCRATIC SIDE—"We've the majority now and want to vote."

Mr. MATTESON moved an adjournment.

Decided in the negative.

POSTPONEMENT.

By general consent the further consideration of the whole subject was postponed till Tuesday next.

Mr. McMULLEN called for the reading of the Presidential Message. The House, he said, would not do itself credit unless this be done.

The Speaker decided the motion was out of order.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. STANTON to draw for seats being regularly before the House, was adopted.

According to the method prescribed all the seats were vacated,—the members retiring without the bar. As the Clerk drew each name, written on a piece of paper, from a box, which many gentlemen attended, should be well shaken, the members severally made their selection, seating themselves to secure possession. Much laughter was occasioned by Mr. WHITFIELD's name being the first drawn. Some of his friends expressed satisfaction by buzzas, clapping of hands and waving of hats. Several on the other side exclaimed: "What business had his name in the box?" And, "He has no right to select a seat."

The Speaker interposed in support of this last expression—the question of his admission, as Delegate from Kansas, being undecided.

The drawing of seats was then concluded, and the House adjourned till Monday.

The South Carolina Legislature.

COLUMBIA, Tuesday, Dec. 2.

Mr. T. Y. SIMONS, Jr., yesterday introduced the following resolutions in the House of Representatives, which were referred to the committee on federal relations:

Resolved, That the constitutional Union of the States of this confederacy, should be an object of primary importance to every wise and patriotic citizen.

Resolved, That in the election of JAMES BUCHANAN of Pennsylvania, and of JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, to the Presidency and Vice-Presidency of this confederacy, we recognize a signal rebuke to the enemies of constitutional liberty, and a firm guarantee that the rights of each and every section will be secured and maintained.

Resolved, That the continual agitation of mere abstract theories (whether they assume the shape of the reopening of the Slave-trade or any other form) can give neither repose or security to the institutions of the South, but must tend to distract and divide the councils of our beloved State, and to alienate from her the support and sympathies of her sister States.

Resolved, That the true policy of the citizens of this Commonwealth, united as they are on every question of vital principle, is to denote their energies to the reform of her internal abuses, and the development of her internal resources.

The Kansas Aid Society Dissolved.

BUFFALO, Friday, Dec. 5.

The St. Louis Democrat publishes a letter dated Lawrence, the 20th ult., signed by Col. J. A. HARVEY, and rising Free-State settlers, denouncing the Kansas Aid Society as a speculating concern originating in Yankeedom, and warning all honest settlers to be duped no longer for "Bleeding Kansas."

Later from Santa Fe.

BUFFALO, Friday, Dec. 5.

The St. Louis Democrat, of the 2d inst., has advices from Santa Fe to the 22d ult. The news, however, is unimportant. The Indians continued their depredations. The gold deposits on the Gila are said to exceed those in the richest portions of California. A large number of citizens had already left Santa Fe for the mines.

SEVERAL SCHOONERS ASHORE ON LAKE ERIE.

OWEGO, Friday, Dec. 5.

A heavy gale has been blowing on the Lake for several days past. The schooners Lake Yankee, Frank Pierce, and Canadian are ashore at Port Credit. Arrival of the Arabia at Boston.

BOSTON, Friday, Dec. 5.

The steamship Arabia arrived here a little before 5 o'clock this evening, too late for her mails to be dispatched southward, either by the land routes or the Sound. They will be forwarded on the early train to-morrow, (Saturday,) reaching New-York about 8 P. M.

The foreign papers per Arabia contain very little to add to the summary of news telegraphed from Halifax.

St. Petersburg accounts to Nov. 10, state that Winter had commenced with great severity, and frost had caused nearly a total interruption of commerce. Of the ships at Cronstadt on Nov. 4, eighty-nine had left at a favorable moment, but the other two hundred were still there.

The steamer Bremen, from New-York, arrived in the Elbe on Nov. 18.

Authentic communications appear as certain the abdication of the King of Denmark in favor of Prince FREDERICK.

THE ARABIA'S PAPERS.

The Arabia arrived at her wharf only a few moments before the New-York steamboat train left this evening; but the newspaper bag of the Associated Press was by great effort placed on board the train at the moment of its departure. Nothing else from the steamer could be got off.

The Niagara at Halifax Outward Bound—No News of the Hecla.

HALIFAX, Friday, Dec. 5.

The steamship Niagara arrived here from Boston at ½ 5 o'clock, and sailed again for Liverpool at 6 o'clock this morning, with a light northwest wind.

The steamer Hecla, overdue from St. Johns, N. F., is still unheard from.

THE STANWIX HALL TRAGEDY.

Second Trial of Louis Baker for the Murder of William Poole, at Stanwix Hall, on the 24th of February, 1855.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.

Before Hon. Charles A. Peabody.

NEWBURG, ORANGE COUNTY, Friday, Dec. 5.

The second trial of Baker, which has been exciting our rural neighbors in Newburg for the last eleven days, has, at length, been brought to a close. The counsel for the people were Hon. STEPHEN B. CUSHING, Attorney-General, A. OAKEY HALL, Esq., District-Attorney, New-York, and CHARLES H. WINFIELD, Esq., District-Attorney of Orange County. The prisoner was defended by JAS. T. BRADY, Esq., of New-York, and STEPHEN W. FULLERTON, Esq., of Newburg. The case for the prosecution was summed up by Mr. CUSHING and Mr. WINFIELD, that for the defence by Mr. BRADY alone. Mr. BRADY's address is characterized by the local journals as a magnificent effort. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, the Judge—in presence of an assemblage so large as to crowd the Court-house to its utmost capacity, and render necessary an imperative order to lock the doors, so as to prevent further attempts at ingress—delivered his charge to the Jury.

After some preliminary remarks, the Judge said:

The prosecution claim that the prisoner is guilty of murder under the subdivision of the statute which makes it that offence to kill a human being from a "premeditated design to take his life," or the life of any other person. To convict him it is necessary to show, 1st, That he killed Poole; 2d, That he did so from a premeditated design. To convict him it is not necessary that the design should have been entertained for any particular length of time; but it must, as the phrase implies, have been the subject of previous meditation. It is also contended by the prosecution that if the prisoner killed Poole without any design to effect his death, but in the heat of passion, by a dangerous weapon and under circumstances constituting neither justifiable nor excusable homicide, he is guilty of manslaughter in the third degree; and such I charge to be the law. To constitute this latter crime you must be satisfied 1st, That the prisoner killed Poole; 2d, That he did so with a dangerous weapon; 3d, That it was without a premeditated design to effect his death; and 4th, That the act was neither justifiable nor excusable homicide.

In reference to the charge of murder, I instruct you that if Baker and his associates, or he alone, entered Stanwix Hall on the night in question with the intent to provoke Poole into a controversy, and, under pretext of some occasion rising out of that, to kill him, and he was so killed, the act is murder. And, also, though Baker and his associates went there lawfully, and for an innocent purpose, yet if being there, and having provoked him to a quarrel, the prisoner meditated a design to take his life, and did do so, the defence of justification would be unavailing, and he would be guilty of the principal charge. It is contended by the defence, and I charge you that if Baker were assaulted by Poole and his friends, and had reasonable ground to apprehend, and did in fact believe that he was in imminent danger of being killed or maimed, or of receiving great personal injury, and necessarily killed Poole to avert such danger, the homicide would be justifiable. I also instruct you that Baker, being assailed, was bound to retreat if he could do so with safety, and if he did not he would not be justified in killing the deceased. But he was not obliged to leave Stanwix Hall because Poole, though his enemy, was there; nor to retreat at all until attacked, nor even then if he could not do so without danger of such injury as justified him in defending himself. It is the law, as stated by the defence, that Baker had a right, as every citizen has, to carry a pistol, being subject to responsibility for its use; and if Baker provided himself with one to defend himself against the attacks of Poole or his party, the use of it at Stanwix Hall would be no circumstance from which any conclusion against him could be drawn, unless the circumstances transpiring there establish to your satisfaction that such act was criminal. It clearly appears that Poole and Baker were for some time before that not hostile to each other, and each had made no threats or threats against the other. This testimony may be relied to for two purposes, one adverse to the prisoner and the other in his favor. It might show a motive on his part for killing Poole at Stanwix Hall, and it might also show that Baker, assailed by Poole as he had reason to apprehend great danger, which without such testing and threats he might not be justified in doing so. It is for you to say whether there is any evidence that when Baker and the other defendants went to Stanwix Hall at 12½ o'clock they had any other than an innocent object. The testimony for the prosecution is that Morrissey, who was engaged in the affair at 11 o'clock with Poole, had gone home, and although they might have inferred from Poole's visit at the Hall at 10 o'clock that he was still there at 12½ o'clock, yet the interval of time was somewhat long, and they would have been warranted in concluding that the place at that hour was shut. If it had been an earlier hour, the presumption of his continued presence would have been stronger. There is no direct evidence, however, that they knew Poole was there. The fact that they were found together that night, as several pieces of public record, is urged to show premeditation among them; but you are not to presume from that alone, or from the mere fact of their being in several places where men usually resort for drink or society, that they had any wrong intention, because, in the City, most of some considerable character than they not unfrequently visit such places where comfortable rooms are often provided, and newspapers furnished, and where refreshments and society can be procured. It seems that Hyler, one of these parties, resided at Stanwix Hall. He had been at the early hour with Morrissey, and, as appears from the proof, was either about to go home alone, or proposed to have somebody go home with him. It is for you to say from these facts or any others in the case, whether any wrong motive in going to Stanwix Hall at this particular time existed. The testimony of Baker's part is proved by Mr. Van Ness, who refers to the time when Baker, Mr. Van Ness says, was a policeman, and states that Baker exhibited a pistol and made the threat which you have heard. Vanderveort was permitted to be questioned as to what he thought was Baker's real intent in that threat, and expressly testified that he did not consider him to be serious. It is for you to say whether this was a loose declaration, or whether it was designedly intended as a deliberate menace, and to give it more or less effect, as you shall determine this question. It seems that Baker resigned in consequence of a difficulty at Platt's saloon, in which Hyer and Turner took part, and at which Baker was present. His resignation is only important because Vanderveort says Baker declared that he had resigned to be uninvolved—and you are to say whether he did so that he might engage in controversy with Poole, or for no illegal or improper design. Baker procured his pistol in consequence of a disturbance at the Gem between him and Poole, which occurred in 1852, and before procuring it he applied to Mr. Charles Burdett for advice as to whether he might retain the weapon for self-defence, and stated it the time—and such statements are, as a rule, applying the act, legal evidence—that he wished to provide himself with a pistol to defend himself. It is for you to say whether this or any other circumstance in the case shows a preparation on his part to meet and assail Poole, such as the prosecution charge.

Then we arrive at Stanwix Hall. There the transactions seem to be involved in the greatest uncertainty. The entrance of Baker and his party was peaceable. Poole was there with a number of his friends, including the witnesses for the prosecution, and who seemed to stand to him in the relation of allies. Baker gave a general invitation to the parties there to drink, and Poole, himself, who had been drinking with his friends, and was neither drunk nor sober, but was in a medium state, invited Turner to drink with him, which he did. The first act leading to violence was that of Pendleton, who applied a disgusting epithet, in jest, to Poole, and it is for you to say whether, in his subsequent violent conduct, he acted with the assent and countenance of Baker, and the other defendants, or entirely for himself in his individual controversy. It is certain that Turner interfered to prevent his troubling Poole; he told him that they did not come there to fight; he told Poole not to mind him, because he was drunk, and even took Poole by the hand at the time. But Pendleton persisted in his aggression. Van Felt, another defendant, and Lyons, then endeavored to restrain Pendleton, but he slapped the former on the face and kicked the latter in the leg, and they both left the place and had no further part in the transaction. Baker took no active part in it, and made no remark, but was silent and passive. The prosecution say that Baker should have interfered to prevent Pendleton acting thus; but the defence say that if he had done so, as the quarrel was with Poole, his personal enemy, it would have led to his being immediately involved in a difficulty with the latter. Poole seems to have acted with more forbearance than would seem appropriate to his military character, as proved in this case, and endured much from Pendleton, including the spitting in his face, which twenty-one men would have threatened; and whether the motive of this conduct of Poole was fear or some other, and different one, is conjectured by the defence, but it is for you to judge. After Pendleton had thus insulted and assaulted Poole, Turner took part in the quarrel by drawing his pistol, but the time at which that occurred is uncertain. You know the events which followed.

Without detaining you further with these preliminary circumstances, I will go directly to the point at which Baker and Poole came into collision. It seems that Poole, either when wounded by Turner, or about that time, staggered out of the recess by the counter near where Baker was; and the witnesses differ as to whether he grabbed Baker or was seized by the latter. Those for the prosecution are not agreed on this point, but it is certain that Poole and Baker were clinched and went down on the floor together at the South wall opposite the counter; and the defence claim that they have proved by Mitchell and McDonough that at the same time when Poole had hold of Baker, Loeler, Poole's brother-in-law, also seized Baker and had him by the hair of the head, Baker being then on the floor, in the grasp of Poole, his friends outnumber—also in that of Loeler, and entirely at their mercy. It is certain that, whether Baker, as his witnesses, or Poole, as those for the prosecution declare, was undermost, it was to each or either of the combatants a dangerous position, and each of them might well have been justified in supposing that he was in imminent danger from his adversary. This is the great question in the case; and it is for you to determine, in view of all the testimony and all the incidents that transpired at the moment when these parties came together, which was the first aggressor, and whether, if Baker killed Poole, he did so from actual necessity, as the only means of escaping the danger he then feared, or whether he shot Poole, using this assault as a mere pretext; and whether he did or did not retreat when he might safely have done so, and avoid the necessity for killing Poole at all. If he killed in self-defence and from necessity, he was justified, and should be acquitted. If he might have retreated safely, and did not do so, then he is guilty of murder, or manslaughter in the third degree, according as the circumstances show or fail to show that he had no design to effect death—the absence of which design is the distinctive characteristic of manslaughter.

As to the flight of Baker there is evidence, the effect of which is to be determined by you. When there is no witness to the homicide, the flight of one who had been with the deceased just before his death, would afford some evidence of guilt. But in this case, where witnesses have told you all that transpired at the homicide, and you have means of judging for yourself what its true character was, the proof of flight seems to me to have but little weight. The prosecution say it bears on the question of Baker's intent, and you may give it such effect in that respect as you deem it deserves. You have had evidence of Poole's character, and of Baker's. That of Baker is shown by several witnesses to be good; it appears he was peaceable and kind-hearted. Nothing to the contrary has been shown, except as it may be disclosed by his acts and associations as they appear in the evidence; and this proof of character bears upon the nature of his intent when he came into conflict with Poole. It has been urged that the witnesses for the prosecution are some of them of a doubtful character, and all more or less friendly to Poole and to his party. Contradictions are also alleged to exist between their present testimony and that which they gave at Baker's trial in New-York. On the other hand, the prosecution claim that Baker's witnesses, Mitchell and McDonough, are friendly to him; and this affects their credibility. You will judge how far these criticisms deserve consideration, and, from the appearance and manner of the witnesses and the accounts they give of themselves, say how much or how little weight they are respectively entitled to.

This case having excited much attention—the transaction itself having greatly excited the community where it occurred, and there having been two attempts at a trial already, it is of great importance, both to the public and to the accused, that you should, if possible, agree on a verdict. If there be any reasonable doubt as to the prisoner's guilt, he is entitled by law to the benefit of it. But if you are convinced that he is guilty either of murder or manslaughter, it is your duty to say so. I have already defined these offences and stated what constituted justifiable homicide; and with the instructions I have given you, I now submit the case for your decision.

The officers of the Court were then sworn to take charge of the Jury while deliberating on their verdict, and the jurors were conducted to their room.

At about 6½ o'clock they were, by consent of the Court and counsel, permitted, under the care of the officers, to take tea at the hotel. A special request was made by some for permission to smoke cigars, which was accorded without demur.

Shortly after 7 o'clock they were reconducted to their room in the Court House.

[The Jury had been unable to agree up to the time of going to press.]

The British Anniversary of the St. Andrew's Society, of Baltimore, was celebrated at the Exchange Hotel, on Monday evening.

[illegible]

From the London Times, Nov. 19.

There is one assurance in the long and able letter [illegible] will not only be superior to Mr. Fillmore, but will be recognized by the majority of the Ostend manifesto. We desire more strongly to believe this, since we think that America should have her Buchanan, and a man having every attribute to secure the respect and reverence due from inferiors of a community over which he presides and nothing could more disorganize them between such an adherence to the principles of the constitution, and such a [illegible] of the constitution, violated by an arbitrary and unconstitutional act, which Mr. Buchanan's friends actually made himself the expositor. But what we wish for people in support of their institutions sometimes they actually realize. We were told that Mr. Buchanan settled all questions between the English and American Governments during his residence as Ambassador here, and that he carried across his Ministry entirely from the South. The first assertion is rather hardly borne out when we remember that not only did Mr. Buchanan not settle the Central American and enlistment questions, but that he was there when, and contributed to the embarrassment by his obstinacy and the electric telegraph communication with our country. The Northern States are MDCCC up, and we know, in the long run, constitutionally weak in comparison with the States of the North; but the forbearance of the Northern States in the commotion of 1851 by certain results of the past election of President. The North has large property relations with the South. The government must yield in that of the slavery question, if the rupture is its will influence on our entire Union. [illegible] FROM A SCHEME OF THE DECLARATION OF [illegible]

Paris, Nov. 17.

The Probable Policy of Mr. Buchanan's Election.

From the London Times, Nov. 17.

It is only fair to believe the information communicated [illegible] Paris, Nov. 17. [illegible] President in the 6th inst., [illegible] Chief Magistrate of the United States [illegible] which has convulsed [illegible] The question as to [illegible] Power and the [illegible] Union [illegible] received [illegible] the hopes of the North [illegible] portion of the English community [illegible] Union must be [illegible] in a sense contrary to [illegible] and in [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Buchanan, when [illegible] the question that had [illegible] Britain. It has been [illegible] Lord Clarendon [illegible] more than one dispute [illegible] representation, not with [illegible] the two countries to use—an event [illegible] amount of acrimony [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] the continent [illegible] Conference [illegible] Mr. Buchanan [illegible] Ostend Conference [illegible] subversive of the [illegible] rights of nationality [illegible] Mr. Buchanan [illegible] a principal part. The [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] adopted by the Confederacy [illegible] Statesman's [illegible] be followed by analogy that [illegible] States with valuable [illegible] follow in the course.

With respect, therefore, to the event which has just [illegible] we can only repeat the observations [illegible] when the Pennsylvania election [illegible] We cannot pretend to [illegible] the Union except by the [illegible] and the opinions of [illegible] neither would it become us to express [illegible] joy or regret at the result [illegible] as a foreign country [illegible] by his own confession [illegible] by the common report of his countrymen [illegible] with the independence of [illegible] States, we cannot but think that, [illegible] the majority [illegible] in fact to be viewed with regret. [illegible] we cannot the world, however, to find that [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] have been so moved by [illegible] disposed, now that it is over, to [illegible] the magnitude and the [illegible] which he may inaugurate. Submission [illegible] all of the majority in favor of the American [illegible] It is therefore probable that in a few weeks [illegible] and exaggeration of the last six [illegible] will have passed away. We cannot agree [illegible] speaking of a disunion [illegible] Union. In past times the [illegible] of such an event was often discussed in [illegible] the very notion was ridiculed [illegible] We could say that the inviolability of the Union was an idea cherished by an [illegible] from youth to the grave, and that an enlightened statesman had been unable during his whole life [illegible] the supremacy Science he had on one side [illegible] the authority of an individual State [illegible]

But we [illegible] Americans debating [illegible] dissolution might not be possible, but also whether it would not be advisable to [illegible] it at once. The result of this election will set the matter at rest. It will be seen that the whole American people will acquiesce in the solemn verdict which has been taken. Perhaps there is not so much sincerity in the dislike to Slavery as might be [illegible] the bitterness of the struggle; perhaps [illegible] and the instinct of property prevail; at any rate, at present the North will acquiesce in all [illegible] Kansas will be a Slave [illegible] will be strictly enforced, [illegible] everything will go on in the old way for the [illegible]

[illegible] the election in its bearings [illegible] We see the people most [illegible] with the American Union; the citizens of the two sections are brought into constant [illegible] the Union [illegible] the States which [illegible] we have, [illegible] the nation [illegible] to carry out [illegible] which we are finally sick. He was not a candidate for the Presidency because he aimed to [illegible] Spain, right because it would [illegible] for the Presidency. He may be [illegible] that now as is at the summit of his [illegible] he will discharge himself from those [illegible] which he has previously committed himself. From this point of view Mr. Buchanan [illegible] in spite of the Ostend Manifesto, indorsed [illegible] it was, by the Cincinnati platform, he is President sufficiently scrupulous as to the law of national [illegible] We trust, for the sake of America and the world, that this will be the case. But still it is impossible not to conclude that there are men who notice to the same conflict position which Mr. Buchanan has already [illegible] and who may consider the persistent [illegible] doctrines as an advantageous policy. [illegible] of these is connected with the present [illegible] and may prolong the irritation and [illegible] which have marked the existing Presidency. [illegible] Davis and Descombe have [illegible] President Pierce, and many [illegible] Mr. Buchanan, [illegible] will [illegible] and administer the affairs of his country with firmness and [illegible] of judgment. The power of an American President is perhaps beyond that of any single [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Buchanan's principal adviser will probably be Judge Douglas, Senator for the Northern State of Illinois, the reputed author of the Missouri Compromise, and the subject and most unscrupulous advocate of slavery extension. The South has never been without obsequious admirers in the North, ready, after having made a reputation by denouncing Slavery, to employ the reputation so made in its support, and to employ against the interests of those who raised them to power the very power which they owe to them. Such men are known to America, from the flexibility of their political countenance, by the homely but expressive name of "Doughfaces," and it matters little, so far as the interests of freedom within and tranquillity without the States are concerned, whether the new President's Cabinet be filled by Southern men such as Jefferson Davis and Benjamin Toombs, or by Northern Doughfaces only too happy to be employed as their obsequious and unscrupulous agents.

Wade [illegible] therefore, from the assurance of [illegible] Buchanan's Cabinet will [illegible] still less from the [illegible] slavery will be extended, that [illegible] easily resisted, and that there will be [illegible] for foreign rights and political ethics. This is just what Mr. Buchanan's previous career would lead us to apprehend, and these are strange reasons why we should form of his Administration better hopes than of that of Mr. Pierce. Nor are we much reassured by being told that Cuba will probably be annexed, but must be purchased, like Louisiana, for we fear this same "must" expresses a moral, and not a physical necessity—a species of sanction which has no binding force at all to men wanting in respect for foreign rights and careless of political ethics.

Passing over, then, the remarks of our correspondent, whose premises seem not a little at war with his conclusions, let us try to make out for ourselves, not from the invectives of party or the declamation of disappointed ambition, but from a fair consideration of the case as it stands, what are the prospects of this country and the United States from the election of Mr. Buchanan. In the first place, there can be no doubt that it will be regarded, and justly regarded, by the South as a great and signal victory; its importance being measured by the terror felt by the victorious party after the defeat in Maine, by the strenuous exertions by which alone it has been obtained, by the fact that it was gained over the North for the first time native and unlined, and by the great probability that this triumph, signal as it is, unless improved to their advantage, may be the very last which the South is destined to obtain. The victory has been one rather of superior organization and dexterity than of greater force; it has required all the influence of Government to secure it, and has been mainly promoted by threats of disunion, which cannot be used with similar effect on every succeeding occasion. All these things tend to enforce upon the Southern mind the necessity of using the next four years so as to make the very utmost of their success, and place a party inferior in numbers and intelligence on a footing of superiority, which nothing but a revolution and civil war can destroy. They have the President and the majority in both Houses; their political existence is at stake; the quarrel with the North is henceforth irreconcilable, the struggle has begun in earnest, and on either banner "Vae victis" will soon be inscribed in very legible characters. We are therefore justified in expecting that, so far as the internal policy of the Union is concerned, the course adopted by Mr. Pierce will be pursued in and carried out with even still greater violence. Now or never is the time to increase the number of Slave States, to admit Kansas, to subdivide Texas, and to seek wherever it may be found fresh territory in which to plant the institution the extension or repression of which is henceforth the only issue of American politics. Whatever be Mr. Buchanan's personal predilection for reasonable and moderate counsels, we believe that he will have great difficulty in standing against the violence of the men by whom he is surrounded, and who are committed to an extent which admits of no increase to the propagation of Slavery and the counteraction, by whatever means, of the free spirit of the North.

As regards foreign policy the prospect might at first sight appear to be equally gloomy. The election of Mr. Buchanan over Mr. Fillmore, agreeing, as they essentially do, in home politics, is a declaration on the part of the American nation in favor of the foreign policy of the former over that of the latter—that is, a declaration in favor of aggression and annexation. Moreover the spirit of annexation is essentially northern, having reference to the necessity of obtaining new Slave States, to counterbalance the accession of Free States from the North. Still, we are disposed to be much more sanguine as to the foreign than as to the domestic policy of the new President, and we are convinced that his election by no means implies hostility to England on the part of the Democrats. An aggressive foreign policy, carried out in the spirit of the Ostend Manifesto, means a foreign war, and a foreign war is in the present state of the Union a contingency which North and South would be equally anxious to avoid. The South would view with dread a chance of a rising among their slaves, in the suppression of which they would have little to hope from the sympathy of the North, and having little accumulated capital, would suffer severely from any restriction of their power of exportation. The North would view with increasing disfavor the prosecution of foreign conquests, which they would justly regard as really made over themselves, and would naturally refuse to aid in operations entailing upon them great immediate loss, and ultimately destined to counterbalance or undermine their due influence in the councils of the Confederation. The breach between North and South is henceforth declared and open; and though by the forms of the Constitution one party may govern, it cannot hope to carry on a war, which is a matter not of abstract rule, but of practical, and very apt to resress by the summary process of revolution inequalities which the indolence of peace has left untouched. We also hope that Mr. Buchanan may rise more nearly than he has hitherto done to the level of his position, and, discarding after he has obtained power the questionable arts by which it was secured, rise above the dictation and exigencies of his party, and think more of the great trust placed in his hands than of the instruments and the assurances by which that trust has been obtained. For ourselves, we can truly say that we shall respect the choice of the American nation in a matter so peculiarly of domestic cognizance, and never allow any objections we may have entertained to Mr. Buchanan's principles or proclivities to prevent us from dealing with respect and candor with the acts of the chief magistrate of a great, a friendly, and a kindred nation.

The French Press on Mr. Buchanan's Election.

From the Paris Pays, Nov. 19.

The election of Mr. Buchanan to the Presidency of the United States, postpones for a time the chances of a conflict between the Northern and Southern States of the American Confederation. The threats of dissolution, made in advance by slaveholders, in the event of the Abolition candidate being elected, fall to the ground by the success of the candidate of the South. The North will be indignant, alarmed, perhaps; but, profoundly constitutional, will submit to the decision of the majority, and will make no appeals to violence.

Will Mr. Buchanan, President of the United States, owing his election to the coalition of Southern interests, and those of some cosmopolite propagandists, feel himself bound to be the passive instrument of these turbulent and egotistic interests? Will he shape his political conduct so as to give his name and authority to the filibusters of Missouri Border Ruffians in the Kansas and adjacent Territories, and to the filibustering enterprise of Walker and Kinney? Is he, in fine, the man of the Ostend Conference, and the official promoter of the annexation of Cuba? We do not think so, or at least we prefer to doubt it.

In the whole course of his political career, which has been a long one, Mr. Buchanan has been a man of accommodation. Without touching upon his personal fidelity, which is above all suspicion, we can say that Mr. Buchanan seems to have practically adopted the motto—

"That man is oblivious who never changes."

Mr. Buchanan has never made himself ridiculous; he has shown, on the contrary, the greatest aptitude for the art of transition. The victorious party has always found him among its warmest supporters. Thanks to this suppleness of mind, Mr. Buchanan has obtained the highest political honors his country's gift, and only left the embassy at London to be the candidate for the first magistracy of the United States.

Mr. Buchanan has been, in the largest acceptation of the word, a fortunate man. Arrived now at the culminating point of his wishes and his ambition, [illegible]

After the election, wealth is known in Europe, next week. I may increase on peak, [illegible] one other [illegible] of the United States for the [illegible] Great Britain for the crime of Slavery in North America; I do not think that case has been fairly understood on either side of the Atlantic. [illegible] FROM A SCHEME OF THE DECLARATION OF [illegible]

Paris, Nov. 17.

The Probable Policy of Mr. Buchanan's Election.

From the London Times, Nov. 17.

It is only fair to believe the information communicated [illegible] Paris, Nov. 17. [illegible] President in the 6th inst., [illegible] Chief Magistrate of the United States [illegible] which has convulsed [illegible] The question as to [illegible] Power and the [illegible] Union [illegible] received [illegible] the hopes of the North [illegible] portion of the English community [illegible] Union must be [illegible] in a sense contrary to [illegible] and in [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Buchanan, when [illegible] the question that had [illegible] Britain. It has been [illegible] Lord Clarendon [illegible] more than one dispute [illegible] representation, not with [illegible] the two countries to use—an event [illegible] amount of acrimony [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] the continent [illegible] Conference [illegible] Mr. Buchanan [illegible] subversive of the [illegible] rights of nationality [illegible] Mr. Buchanan [illegible] a principal part. The [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] adopted by the Confederacy [illegible] Statesman's [illegible] be followed by analogy that [illegible] States with valuable [illegible] follow in the course.

With respect, therefore, to the event which has just [illegible] we can only repeat the observations [illegible] when the Pennsylvania election [illegible] We cannot pretend to [illegible] the Union except by the [illegible] and the opinions of [illegible] neither would it become us to express [illegible] joy or regret at the result [illegible] as a foreign country [illegible] by his own confession [illegible] by the common report of his countrymen [illegible] with the independence of [illegible] States, we cannot but think that, [illegible] the majority [illegible] in fact to be viewed with regret. [illegible] we cannot the world, however, to find that [illegible] Buchanan [illegible] have been so moved by [illegible] disposed, now that it is over, to [illegible] the magnitude and the [illegible] which he may inaugurate. Submission [illegible] all of the majority in favor of the American [illegible] It is therefore probable that in a few weeks [illegible] and exaggeration of the last six [illegible] will have passed away. We cannot agree [illegible] speaking of a disunion [illegible] Union. In past times the [illegible] of such an event was often discussed in [illegible] the very notion was ridiculed [illegible] We could say that the inviolability of the Union was an idea cherished by an [illegible] from youth to the grave, and that an enlightened statesman had been unable during his whole life [illegible] the supremacy Science he had on one side [illegible] the authority of an individual State [illegible]

But we [illegible] Americans debating [illegible] dissolution might not be possible, but also whether it would not be advisable to [illegible] it at once. The result of this election will set the matter at rest. It will be seen that the whole American people will acquiesce in the solemn verdict which has been taken. Perhaps there is not so much sincerity in the dislike to Slavery as might be [illegible] the bitterness of the struggle; perhaps [illegible] and the instinct of property prevail; at any rate, at present the North will acquiesce in all [illegible] Kansas will be a Slave [illegible] will be strictly enforced, [illegible] everything will go on in the old way for the [illegible]

[illegible] the election in its bearings [illegible] We see the people most [illegible] with the American Union; the citizens of the two sections are brought into constant [illegible] the Union [illegible] the States which [illegible] we have, [illegible] the nation [illegible] to carry out [illegible] which we are finally sick. He was not a candidate for the Presidency because he aimed to [illegible] Spain, but he accepted strong [illegible] Spanish rights because it would [illegible] for the Presidency. He may be [illegible] that now as is at the summit of his [illegible] he will discharge himself from those [illegible] which he has previously committed himself. From this point of view Mr. Buchanan [illegible] in spite of the Ostend Manifesto, indorsed [illegible] it was, by the Cincinnati platform, he is President sufficiently scrupulous as to the law of national [illegible] We trust, for the sake of America and the world, that this will be the case. But still it is impossible not to conclude that there are men who notice to the same conflict position which Mr. Buchanan has already [illegible] and who may consider the persistent [illegible] doctrines as an advantageous policy. [illegible] of these is connected with the present [illegible] and may prolong the irritation and [illegible] which have marked the existing Presidency. [illegible] Davis and Descombe have [illegible] President Pierce, and many [illegible] Mr. Buchanan, [illegible] will [illegible] and administer the affairs of his country with firmness and [illegible] of judgment. The power of an American President is perhaps beyond that of any single [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Buchanan's principal adviser will probably be Judge Douglas, Senator for the Northern State of Illinois, the reputed author of the Missouri Compromise, and the subject and most unscrupulous advocate of slavery extension. The South has never been without obsequious admirers in the North, ready, after having made a reputation by denouncing Slavery, to employ the reputation so made in its support, and to employ against the interests of those who raised them to power the very power which they owe to them. Such men are known to America, from the flexibility of their political countenance, by the homely but expressive name of "Doughfaces," and it matters little, so far as the interests of freedom within and tranquillity without the States are concerned, whether the new President's Cabinet be filled by Southern men such as Jefferson Davis and Benjamin Toombs, or by Northern Doughfaces only too happy to be employed as their obsequious and unscrupulous agents.

Wade [illegible] therefore, from the assurance of [illegible] Buchanan's Cabinet will [illegible] still less from the [illegible] slavery will be extended, that [illegible] easily resisted, and that there will be [illegible] for foreign rights and political ethics. This is just what Mr. Buchanan's previous career would lead us to apprehend, and these are strange reasons why we should form of his Administration better hopes than of that of Mr. Pierce. Nor are we much reassured by being told that Cuba will probably be annexed, but must be purchased, like Louisiana, for we fear this same "must" expresses a moral, and not a physical necessity—a species of sanction which has no binding force at all to men wanting in respect for foreign rights and careless of political ethics.

Passing over, then, the remarks of our correspondent, whose premises seem not a little at war with his conclusions, let us try to make out for ourselves, not from the invectives of party or the declamation of disappointed ambition, but from a fair consideration of the case as it stands, what are the prospects of this country and the United States from the election of Mr. Buchanan. In the first place, there can be no doubt that it will be regarded, and justly regarded, by the South as a great and signal victory; its importance being measured by the terror felt by the victorious party after the defeat in Maine, by the strenuous exertions by which alone it has been obtained, by the fact that it was gained over the North for the first time native and unlined, and by the great probability that this triumph, signal as it is, unless improved to their advantage, may be the very last which the South is destined to obtain. The victory has been one rather of superior organization and dexterity than of greater force; it has required all the influence of Government to secure it, and has been mainly promoted by threats of disunion, which cannot be used with similar effect on every succeeding occasion. All these things tend to enforce upon the Southern mind the necessity of using the next four years so as to make the very utmost of their success, and place a party inferior in numbers and intelligence on a footing of superiority, which nothing but a revolution and civil war can destroy. They have the President and the majority in both Houses; their political existence is at stake; the quarrel with the North is henceforth irreconcilable, the struggle has begun in earnest, and on either banner "Vae victis" will soon be inscribed in very legible characters. We are therefore justified in expecting that, so far as the internal policy of the Union is concerned, the course adopted by Mr. Pierce will be pursued in and carried out with even still greater violence. Now or never is the time to increase the number of Slave States, to admit Kansas, to subdivide Texas, and to seek wherever it may be found fresh territory in which to plant the institution the extension or repression of which is henceforth the only issue of American politics. Whatever be Mr. Buchanan's personal predilection for reasonable and moderate counsels, we believe that he will have great difficulty in standing against the violence of the men by whom he is surrounded, and who are committed to an extent which admits of no increase to the propagation of Slavery and the counteraction, by whatever means, of the free spirit of the North.

As regards foreign policy the prospect might at first sight appear to be equally gloomy. The election of Mr. Buchanan over Mr. Fillmore, agreeing, as they essentially do, in home politics, is a declaration on the part of the American nation in favor of the foreign policy of the former over that of the latter—that is, a declaration in favor of aggression and annexation. Moreover the spirit of annexation is essentially northern, having reference to the necessity of obtaining new Slave States, to counterbalance the accession of Free States from the North. Still, we are disposed to be much more sanguine as to the foreign than as to the domestic policy of the new President, and we are convinced that his election by no means implies hostility to England on the part of the Democrats. An aggressive foreign policy, carried out in the spirit of the Ostend Manifesto, means a foreign war, and a foreign war is in the present state of the Union a contingency which North and South would be equally anxious to avoid. The South would view with dread a chance of a rising among their slaves, in the suppression of which they would have little to hope from the sympathy of the North, and having little accumulated capital, would suffer severely from any restriction of their power of exportation. The North would view with increasing disfavor the prosecution of foreign conquests, which they would justly regard as really made over themselves, and would naturally refuse to aid in operations entailing upon them great immediate loss, and ultimately destined to counterbalance or undermine their due influence in the councils of the Confederation. The breach between North and South is henceforth declared and open; and though by the forms of the Constitution one party may govern, it cannot hope to carry on a war, which is a matter not of abstract rule, but of practical, and very apt to redress by the summary process of revolution inequalities which the indolence of peace has left untouched. We also hope that Mr. Buchanan may rise more nearly than he has hitherto done to the level of his position, and, discarding after he has obtained power the questionable arts by which it was secured, rise above the dictation and exigencies of his party, and think more of the great trust placed in his hands than of the instruments and the assurances by which that trust has been obtained. For ourselves, we can truly say that we shall respect the choice of the American nation in a matter so peculiarly of domestic cognizance, and never allow any objections we may have entertained to Mr. Buchanan's principles or proclivities to prevent us from dealing with respect and candor with the acts of the chief magistrate of a great, a friendly, and a kindred nation.

The French Press on Mr. Buchanan's Election.

From the Paris Pays, Nov. 19.

The election of Mr. Buchanan to the Presidency of the United States, postpones for a time the chances of a conflict between the Northern and Southern States of the American Confederation. The threats of dissolution, made in advance by slaveholders, in the event of the Abolition candidate being elected, fall to the ground by the success of the candidate of the South. The North will be indignant, alarmed, perhaps; but, profoundly constitutional, will submit to the decision of the majority, and will make no appeals to violence.

Will Mr. Buchanan, President of the United States, owing his election to the coalition of Southern interests, and those of some cosmopolite propagandists, feel himself bound to be the passive instrument of these turbulent and egotistic interests? Will he shape his political conduct so as to give his name and authority to the filibusters of Missouri Border Ruffians in the Kansas and adjacent Territories, and to the filibustering enterprise of Walker and Kinney? Is he, in fine, the man of the Ostend Conference, and the official promoter of the annexation of Cuba? We do not think so, or at least we prefer to doubt it.

In the whole course of his political career, which has been a long one, Mr. Buchanan has been a man of accommodation. Without touching upon his personal fidelity, which is above all suspicion, we can say that Mr. Buchanan seems to have practically adopted the motto—

"That man is oblivious who never changes."

Mr. Buchanan has never made himself ridiculous; he has shown, on the contrary, the greatest aptitude for the art of transition. The victorious party has always found him among its warmest supporters. Thanks to this suppleness of [illegible] Literary and Scientific Review of the Week.

[illegible] Our list of religious books for the week is [illegible] though it contains no new works of considerable interest except perhaps Dr. [illegible] Church of the American Pulpit, [1] which [illegible] given in a condensed form an immense [illegible] concerning all the deceased [illegible] in the United States. [illegible] from the formality of history or even of [illegible] biography, it sketches rapidly the leading incidents in the life of each one of its subjects and appends such anecdotes, incidents and traits of character as the most diligent research has been able to command. One of the most striking and admirable features of the work is found in the Letters from friends or acquaintances of the persons noticed, giving their reminiscences, and opinions of their characters. The book has been compiled with immense industry and with the taste and practical good judgment which would naturally be expected from its distinguished author.....We have also an Exposition of the Principles and Practices of the Baptists, [2] from the pen of Dr. WAYLAND, who is among the ablest and most [illegible] clergymen of that denomination, which in this country certainly numbers its full proportion of men of learning and ability. The work is a series of articles originally published in the [illegible] of this City, and is designed to give a [illegible] view of the subject which it treats.... The Doctrine of Baptism, [3] is a controversial book upon the same subject in which Dr. GEO. D. ARMSTRONG, a Presbyterian clergyman of New-York, vindicates the positions and principles of the Baptist Church....A work with the Title of The Bible on the Workshop, [4] by Rev. JOHN W. MEARS, presents the friendly teachings of Christianity in regard to labor, closely and with the object of adapting to the principles of the Christian faith the highly attractive of the laboring classes. ....A very useful and excellent book for popular reading is made up of the various writings of the late Dr. ALEXANDER, for the American Tract Society, and now collected under the general title of Practical Works, [5.] The clear common sense, fervent religious spirit, and plain forcible style which distinguished the venerable Doctor, are exhibited in this collection of his minor, but perhaps most useful, writings....EDWARD ARNOT, Esq., of English estate and Fellow of Oxford, contributes an octavo volume to the literature of the standing controversy between the Romanists and Protestants, in which the matter is discussed with learning and ability under the title The Church of Christ, [6.] ....A most popular book upon the same general subject is given in the form of letters, giving sketches of Rome, Christian and Papal, [7] and containing a revelation of the mysteries of Jesuitism and the Inquisition....The American Tract Society has published the second volume of its edition of the Family Bible, with Notes; [8] and rather as striking indication of the tendency towards the observance of forms in public worship, even by those denominations in which they have been disregarded hitherto, is furnished by the publication of a compact and handsome Book of Public Prayer, [9] compiled from the authorized formularies and intended for the use of the Presbyterian Church....We have several volumes of sermons, the first and largest of which is entitled Cyclopedia of Sermons, [10] and which gives a skeleton or outline of religious discourses upon a great variety of topics usually introduced into the pulpit, designed apparently for the convenience of ministers who can fill up a sermon more easily than they can write one for themselves. In England, skeleton sermons of this sort are in extensive use. This volume is by Dr. BURNS, an English divine....A book of doctrinal discourses, fifty-two in number, entitled Village Sermons, [11] by Rev. GEORGE BURDER, is issued by the Tract Society, and two volumes of Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical, [12] are published from the manuscripts of the late Professor WM. ANDREW BUTLER, of Dublin University....A thick octavo volume of Essays and Reviews, [13] by CHARLES HODGE, D. D., of the Princeton Theological Seminary, contains a number of very able papers, entirely theological and mainly polemical, originally contributed to the pages of the Princeton Review. Dr. HODGE writes with spirit and life, as well as logic and learning, and has added largely to the best controversial literature of the day....Besides these works we have Life in Israel, [14] an attempt, not unsuccessful, to popularize incidents of Hebrew History and sketches of character, by Mrs. MARIA T. RICHARDS, who is already known in this field;—Ishmael and the Church, [15] by Dr. LEWIS CHEESEMAN, which is an attempt to trace through current history the relations of Islamism to Christianity;—The Redeemer's Refuge, [16] a collection of fugitive meditations upon Christ and Heaven, by Rev. J. P. THOMPSON; and a delightful little book for children, entitled Jesus upon Earth, [17.] Another larger work, adapted to riper minds, published anonymously, is fiction in form but in substance is a conversational argument in support of Revelation against the attacks of Rationalism. It is entitled, The Two Lights, [18] and is commended by the author to those who, having watched the progress of the assaults upon Christianity, "will see the importance of this contribution to the cause of Truth."

EDUCATION AND MISCELLANEOUS.

In the department of EDUCATION, several works of considerable interest have been laid upon our table. Foremost among them is Harper's School History, [19] a volume prepared with questions and illustrations, by JACOB ABBOTT, for the use of schools, and intended to cover the whole period of History, and to furnish all on this subject which need be taught among elementary studies. Mr. ABBOTT's popularity in this department is wide and well-known. He has few, if any equals, in the skillful adaptation of his writings to the purpose of general instruction. The book is neatly printed, and will be a favorite with pupils as well as teachers....Another little book by the same author, About Common Things, [20] will also be a welcome addition to every juvenile library....A fourth edition of Gregory's Organic Chemistry [21] has been issued under the capable editorial supervision of Professor SANFORD, of Cincinnati—and also a new edition of MATHEW's Medical Botany of Diseased Education, [22] in which, [illegible] upon its general subject, there is given a great deal of very valuable and interesting detail about the [illegible]

[illegible] things in the world which [illegible] be abolished. When an elected President, on a Democratic [illegible] party obligations and [illegible] preference, in the discharge of his [illegible] functions, we think that he is untrue to his trust, and we protest against the practice as at once unjust and indecent. But we can bear with an evil which does not [illegible] the proportions of an outrage.

When the leaders of one political party cajole many, in a free State, into to themselves all the intelligence, and to their followers all the virtues of the nation, we lament their equal lack of perception and of patriotism; but we can afford to put up with an arrogance which stops short of baseness and assumption. But when an elected President of the United States, and the leaders of a great party in this Republic continue to denounce every State which refuses them a majority of its votes, as a hot-bed of treason, and to deny to every citizen who opposes their policy the consideration, both public and private, which is due to his station and his character, we think that matters have reached a point at which "forbearance ceases to be a virtue." And this point of the issue between President Pierce and the leaders of the Democratic Party on the one side, and those States and citizens of the Confederation whose action has arrayed them in opposition to the policy of the Administration, and the decision of the Democracy on the other, has now been fairly reached.

It has long been customary for the members of the dominant party at Washington to assume a style and tone in dealing with the arguments, and in replying to the rhetoric of their opponents, which would not ill become the functionaries of a despotic Government in their intercourse with suspected rebels. It has long been impossible for any man to aspire to a high official position in the National Government who had ever taken strong ground in opposition to the principles of that Sectional Southern party within a party by which the policy of the Democratic leaders has been mainly shaped and moulded. But it is a new feature in the political relations of this country, that the Supreme Executive should make his public message to the National Legislature the vehicle of the most insulting aspersions upon the motives and the character of a majority of his fellow-citizens. It is a new feature in the party warfare of this country that the members of a party which has won a constitutional victory at the polls, should use such language in speaking of their opponents as would only be justified in the mouths of men who had forcibly wrested the liberties of their country from the grasp of seditious conspirators.

When the States General of France legally convened and assembled, dared to debate the propositions submitted to them by the ministers of Louis XIV., the young King, aspiring to despotic dignity, presented himself before them with dirty boots and whip in hand, and ordered them to dispute.

The attitude taken up by President Pierce in his last Message to Congress, though a caricature and a sufficiently ridiculous caricature of this proceeding, cannot be suffered to pass unrebuked, for the old Ovidian rule, "Obsta principiis," "resist the beginning of evil," must not be lost sight of because these beginnings are pitiful and paltry.

In every State of this Union in which the Republican Party has won a majority of votes, at the recent election, that majority has been won by constitutional means, and beneath a banner inscribed with constitutional principles. The men who have been returned to Congress by the Republican Party represent a large portion of the most intelligent and powerful constituencies in the United States. Under any just theory and reasonable practice of Constitutional Government, the representatives of such a party, if not conciliated in the policy of their opponents, would at least be entitled to respectful and courteous treatment.

Under the actual government of the United States, ruled by our Democratic Dictators, the representatives of the party to which they belong are to be dealt with as the Nogarolis dealt with the Romans, or the Spaniards with the Aztecs. They are not merely to be ignored—they are also to be insulted; they are not colleagues with whom counsel is to be taken, but dangerous discorganizers, who are to be bettered into submission, and disgoaded into decency.

The beginning of these things is not of yesterday; but those who are treasonable or too indifferent to look back to their origin, may at least be induced to look forward to their consequences. If we are prepared to surrender, one by one, the safeguards alike of our honor and of our dignity in the Confederation, we can afford to look on quietly upon the dictatorial and despotic administration of the National Government. If we mean to be, and to continue, the equal members of an entirely Republic, it is time that we should at least begin to consider whether [illegible] the steady downward drift of all these usurpations and usurpations.

[illegible] of our Presidential Election of the issue. The writer, who signs himself a Pennsylvanian, expresses the following confidence that all the Southern States, with the exception of Maryland—Pennsylvania, Illinois and Indiana will cast their votes for Mr. Buchanan. The result shows the remarkable accuracy of the prediction. These are precisely the votes by which Mr. Buchanan has been elected.

The writer makes some other predictions which we hope may prove to be equally well founded. He predicts that, instead of following in the footsteps of Mr. Pierce, acting upon the principles of the Ostend Manifesto, and submitting to the dictation and control of the South, President Buchanan will pursue a conciliatory and conservative course—securing the rights of all sections and parties, and avoiding all extremes in his Administration both of foreign and domestic affairs. He bases this judgment upon his opinion of Mr. Buchanan's character, his experience of his past action and the necessities of his position. If he had foreseen the tremendous strength which the Republican Party has developed in the Free States, he might have added its moral force to the considerations which must influence Mr. Buchanan in his administration of the Government.

The writer in question makes a remark, which is true and important,—not only in connection with the policy of Mr. Buchanan, but with the general course of our Government. It is that the conservative, reflecting, and most cultivated portion of our people have more influence upon the Administration, than they have upon the election—of a President. This is, unquestionably, true;—and it affords another ground of hope that the new regime may be less disastrous to the country than has been feared.

The Martyred Sumner.

We knew what the result would be, when Mr. Sumner's letter, declining to deliver any more lectures to us, should reach South Carolina; and so, too, did Mr. Sumner. He left us, wearing, not the victorious wreaths which he might have won, but a bogus martyr's crown, which he preferred instead. South Carolina will do anything for Sumner, to show her sympathy, but listen to his lectures. But the people of the South are not a lecture-going people. The Charleston Mercury gives the first indignant echo to Mr. Sumner's letter. That paper says:

"It has been held as an offence against Northern pride, to vindicate the truth of history in regard to the part which this State acted in the great drama of the Revolution; a period, one would suppose, far enough back to save it from the violent passions of present politics. It appears, however, that it is not so. It appears that South Carolina, in the spirit of Northern justice, is to be maligned through all past time, and that the partisans of 'Uncle Tom' Bancroft will not admit that there ever has rested a single ray of honest light upon her soil."

Of course the Mercury, as well as Mr. Sumner, knows that this is all bosh, and that not a word was anywhere uttered against Mr. Sumner, and that he was treated with the utmost consideration. In this City, where he made his last effort, it is very true that the people did not show any hankering after his lectures, because there were greater attractions elsewhere at the same price, on the nights when he held forth; but the only disrespect shown to him was by staying away. The Mercury says:

"He had profuse invitations, from all manner of clubs and literary societies, but such was the studied hostility manifested by the Press, and the public opinion which goads the Press, that he thought it only justice to himself and the cause he represents, to forego any further hostile demonstrations. He has, at least, succeeded in an important point: that the most distinguished Southern lecturer, taking up the most popular topics in the history of his section of the country, cannot be listened to with patience by a population that has been fed by the slanders and misrepresentations of an Abolition Press."

We wonder that the Mercury did not see the strange inconsistency between the first and last part of its statement; between the "profuse invitations from all manner of Clubs and Literary Societies," and the alleged hostility of both press and people at the North. The truth of the matter seems to be that Mr. Sumner was eager to seize the first plausible opportunity that offered to return to his friends a persecuted individual, and a martyr to his devotion to the South.

Congress.

Nothing important was done in Congress yesterday. The Republicans were beaten, so far as they went, on the Whitfield case,—Mr. Grow's motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which his right to a seat was denied being lost—Ayes 108, Noes 111. But the House got no further. The question of reconsidering was not taken up,—the members proceeding to draw for seats.

The Senate was not in session.

Mr. Buchanan's Election in Europe.—We observe, from our files by the Arago, that, at the time she left Havre, on the 19th ult., the election of Mr. Buchanan to the Presidency of the United States was known in most of the principal European cities. As the impression has prevailed abroad that Mr. Buchanan was the representative of American Filibusterism in general, and the head and front of the Ostend Manifesto Doctrine in particular, our readers may be curious to learn in what light his election is regarded on the other side of the Atlantic. We therefore print in this morning's issue several articles from British and French journals on the subject. These writers, on the whole, instead of elucidating the questions they profess to discuss, will rather befog their readers by their dogmatic and irrational conclusions. The London Times, for example, taking its tone from that of party journals in this country before the election, expects that the new administration will persevere in the course, and will follow out with even greater violence the domestic policy of Mr. Pierce. Now, the very arguments which the Times uses to support its expectations are such as indicate an opposite conclusion. The immense vote cast for Col. Fremont—the great probability (as the Times says) that this triumph is the last that the South is destined to obtain—and, above all, the utter disrepute into which the Pierce Administration has fallen—will be so many beacons to the incoming Government to warn it from the rocks and shoals upon which its predecessors foundered, and will, if wise counsels prevail, insure a moderation that could not otherwise have been anticipated. In regard to the annexation foreign policy of Mr. Buchanan's Administration, both the Times and the Paris Presse (an article from which spoke we translate) take more sensible grounds,

[illegible]

[illegible] Cabinet will be retained; nor will Hunter or Wise accept place; nor will New-York be represented; nor will fire-eaterism or fillibusterism be countenanced; nor will clinquism, of any color or shade, be listened to or favored. Not an individual living has, as yet, been made the confidant of Mr. Buchanan's intentions regarding the future. Flashes of truth occasionally appear from Wheatland, in the shape of assertions of independence from the President elect, and declarations of loyal adhesion to broad national principles, but details are carefully avoided. There have been many reputations, but no committals. Local officials will be permitted to remain intact until their term of office expires. When that period arrives, every man will be replaced—not on the principle of decapitation, but of "rotation of office." Thus, in New-York, neither Mr. Redfield, nor Mr. Cochrane, nor Mr. Brodhead, nor Mr. Fowler, will be interfered with, in their respective places, until the fullness of time shall come—then, however, there will be a clean sweep. The names of their successors are so little imagined, even by the most "knowing ones," that several persons, who have been at Wheatland, have owned up to coming away with a flea in their ear, and to having explicit assurance from the President elect, that he had not reflected, and would not be induced to reflect upon the subject of his appointments in New-York, before the month of February next. He intimated, however, that cliques would be treated with due contempt, and that the representatives of the Democratic rank and file would alone be consulted in making up his mind what it would be proper to do. Perhaps, also, those have been specified whom he considered as belonging to the two classes of cliques and regular organization; but, upon this point, I do not think proper, just now, to enlarge.

I have promised to give you, one of these days, a list of all the applicants, for various offices, belonging to your City. I will do so very soon; but it may be wise to wait a week or so, until the excitement produced by my former communications shall have subsided. The letters of "Junius," if the stories I hear are true, were scarcely ascribed to more authors than my plain, matter-of-fact and irreputable lucubrations have been. Poor, pitiful Sickles, notwithstanding the universality of his inventive talents, has not been able to get beyond the Surveyor as instigator, and one of his bottle-holders as perpetrator, of the exposures of his intrigues. He owes me thanks, that I have raised him to the dignity of contempt and ridicule. Publicity of any kind, gives an indorsement to his notoriety, for which gratitude is due; but I should be sorry to share any claim I have upon his notice, with either John Cochrane or his Adus Achates. Bad men, as well as good men, are public property; and, in dealing with the former as well as the latter category of individuals, I shall say not one syllable which I am not able, if necessity urges, to prove abundantly—even if I have to go into the history of the petty sessions and quashed indictments. I have done with none of the 4,600. Walker, Schell, McKeon, Sanders, Fowler, Sickles, &c., are none of them, yet, "rifed of all their sweets;" but "nil tenere, nil timide, sed omnia consilio et virtute."

The New-York State Library.

A new catalogue of the State Library at Albany has just been published by the State authorities. Two volumes are already issued,—one a thick octavo of 967 pages, giving the catalogue of the General Library, and the other of 400 pages, embracing a list of the works in the Law Library. A third volume will be published, containing a catalogue of the manuscripts, engravings, coins, &c.

The State Library is rapidly increasing in size, value and utility. It now embraces 42,324 volumes, of which 30,011, including 144 volumes of manuscripts, are in the General Library and 12,000 in the Law Library. This is an increase of 20,000 volumes in five years, an increase arising from purchases made by appropriations of the Legislature, whether received in exchange from other countries, and donations. Some very valuable collections of manuscripts, including the papers of Gov. George Clinton and Sir William Johnson, have been given to the Library.

The Law Library of this State has the reputation of being one of the most valuable and complete in the United States.

The preparation of this Catalogue has been a work of great labor. It has been faithfully and skillfully done,—mainly we believe by Mr. Hugh A. Hower, one of the Assistant Librarians.

"BONNER HAS RUINED THE NEWSPAPER BUSINESS," said a disconsolate publisher the other day. "He puts in such enormous advertisements of that everlasting LEDGER, that it is no use for any other publisher to advertise in a small way any more." There may be a good deal of truth in that remark. See the LEDGER for THIS (Friday) MORNING, which contains the great new story of "SARAH PERCIVAL; OR, THE BRIDE OF THE HOUSE OF GOLD."

"THE GIRL THAT I LEFT BEHIND ME," did not create a more deep-drawn sigh than the deprivation of the perusal of the NEW-YORK LEDGER." So writes home a young man, who a short time ago emigrated to Australia. If this individual could have seen a copy of the LEDGER of this morning, and observed what a great improvement it is even on all preceding numbers, the sigh for "the girl that he left behind him" would not have been a circumstance to the one that would have convulsed his whole frame for the loss of so rare a luxury.

SNOWFLAKES—GREAT IS THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—Its issues are as pure and countless as snowflakes, and irresistible as avalanches; and this morning they are more so than ever. Rush for the LEDGER, and see Mrs. CAROLINE INGRAHAM'S new story of SARAH PERCIVAL; OR, THE BRIDE OF THE HOUSE OF GOLD. Also, more of Cone's great story of ORION; FANNY FERN'S, Mrs. SOUTHWORTH'S, ALICE CAREY'S, and Miss GIBSON'S SKETCHES, POEMS, and STORIES, and more attractions besides than can be found in any other paper in the world. The LEDGER is for sale by all News and Periodical Dealers in the United States and Canada.

Returning to this city in 1850, he introduced "Ricord's Practice," a method of treatment which, from rapidity of cure and permanent safety to the constitution, has revolutionized medical science, in this class of maladies. ☞ DANTON, the historian, says that in 1449 King CHARLES VII. of France, made a grand entrée into Rouen, wearing a felt hat, with a crimson silk lining and crimson plume. This is the first hat mentioned in history, nothing but caps having been worn before them, and the wise old chronicler adds, that the people were quite astounded at the new style of headpiece. We don't know what they would have said if CHARLES had worn one of those beautiful WINTER HATS of the great KNOX's manufacture, the superiority of which is daily attested by the thousands of customers who throng KNOX's store, at No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton-street.

☞ The simple announcement in our columns to-day of the fact that Messrs. CHAS. HERARD & Co., of No. 361 Grand-street, will commence closing out their rich and fashionable stock of Dry Goods on Monday, Dec. 8, is sufficient, we think, to guarantee a crowded store. For when a stock of dry goods is to be sacrificed, prices seem to be of little consequence to these men.

CONDITION OF THE RIVER—THE LOW STAGE OF WATER AND THE GROUNDING OF STEAMBOATS.—The river is unusually low, and the water on the bars is not sufficient to allow the first-class vessels to pass over them, excepting at high-water mark. The steamer Isaac Newton, which left this city last evening, was at noon to-day, aground on the eastern shore, opposite to Greenbush. Finding a large tow aground last evening, on Cuyler's bay, and being unable to get by them, it was concluded to come to, and the Newton lay all night at Ransom's dock, just below the South ferry landing. In starting off this morning the Pilot ran her too close to the eastern shore where she grounded. The steamer New-World came to at Chatham, where she lay until flood-tide had set in and reached her dock at noon. When she came alongside of the Newton the New-World made an unsuccessful attempt to get her off. The Hendrik Hudson grounded opposite Cedar Hill, where she remained until the New-World passed, when she was got off. When we left the Hendrik was alongside of the Newton endeavoring to pull her off.

The Francis Skiddy was the first boat up this morning, she having arrived about 11 o'clock. The steamer P. G. Coxe, from Catskill, was up in good season, as was also the propeller Reliance from Poughkeepsie. We learn from the pilot of the latter vessel, that in the vicinity of Catskill, where the bars are numerous, the ice is quite thick and formidable. Opposite this city there is but little ice to be seen, and all the ferry boats are running regularly. The New-World and the Hendrik will leave at the usual hour this evening.—Albany Journal, 8th.

FRIDAY, Dec. 5,—P. M.

The failure of Messrs. JACOB LITTLE & Co. was announced on the formal opening of the Stock Exchange this morning. The event was unexpected, and so startling at the moment as to unsettle the dealings of the Board. But it can scarcely be called surprising. Mr. LITTLE had been a very enormous seller against the rise of the market, and is probably a party to two-thirds the outstanding contracts registered at the Board for the past sixty or ninety days. The regular readers of this column will readily understand from the course of the market since its recovery from the factitious depression early in November, that no single party, whatever his wealth and previous success might have been, could keep the field against the public sense of the real value of Stocks and the state of the country, and not be beaten. It was only a question of time, and that time came sooner than generally looked for. The suddenness of the official announcement that Mr. L. would suspend on his obligations to-day, proposing to adjust his affairs on the basis of the prices of the day, coupled with the fact that he threw upon an excited and unsettled market, through his Brokers, the bulk of the cash Stocks, which he had provided to meet part of his early maturing contracts, caused prices to stagger from 1 to 2 ⅌ cent. on the Western road list, ¾@1 ⅌ cent. on Erie, the same on Reading, and a fraction on New-York Central. This, however, was but momentary, and the natural and almost inevitable consequence of so heavy a default in the delivery of Stocks which the buyers had contracted for in view of much higher prices, told at once on the dealings of the afternoon session, when, after consultation with their outside principals, the commission brokers were eager buyers at much the same rates as yesterday—the market closing firm and with an upward tendency.

The failure of so old and prominent a member of the Stock Exchange—and one who, in the vicissitudes of the business, has generally shown himself a lenient and liberal creditor—could not occur without exciting a wide sensation in the Street, not unmixed with personal sympathy. His position, in technical phrase, as a Bear speculator, had, however, for several years been a commanding and of late a very defiant one; and the event of the day fully sorely on many parties, who are thrown out of their Stocks by his failure. However this may be, the check to his career has a public place not unworthy of consideration.

FRIDAY, Dec. 5,—P. M.

The failure of Messrs. JACOB LITTLE & Co. was announced on the formal opening of the Stock Exchange this morning. The event was unexpected, and so startling at the moment as to unsettle the dealings of the Board. But it can scarcely be called surprising. Mr. LITTLE had been a very enormous seller against the rise of the market, and is probably a party to two-thirds the outstanding contracts registered at the Board for the past sixty or ninety days. The regular readers of this column will readily understand from the course of the market since its recovery from the factitious depression early in November, that no single party, whatever his wealth and previous success might have been, could keep the field against the public sense of the real value of Stocks and the state of the country, and not be beaten. It was only a question of time, and that time came sooner than generally looked for. The suddenness of the official announcement that Mr. L. would suspend on his obligations to-day, proposing to adjust his affairs on the basis of the prices of the day, coupled with the fact that he threw upon an excited and unsettled market, through his Brokers, the bulk of the cash Stocks, which he had provided to meet part of his early maturing contracts, caused prices to stagger from 1 to 2 ⅌ cent. on the Western road list, ¾@1 ⅌ cent. on Erie, the same on Reading, and a fraction on New-York Central. This, however, was but momentary, and the natural and almost inevitable consequence of so heavy a default in the delivery of Stocks which the buyers had contracted for in view of much higher prices, told at once on the dealings of the afternoon session, when, after consultation with their outside principals, the commission brokers were eager buyers at much the same rates as yesterday—the market closing firm and with an upward tendency.

The failure of so old and prominent a member of the Stock Exchange—and one who, in the vicissitudes of the business, has generally shown himself a lenient and liberal creditor—could not occur without exciting a wide sensation in the Street, not unmixed with personal sympathy. His position, in technical phrase, as a Bear speculator, had, however, for several years been a commanding and of late a very defiant one; and the event of the day fully sorely on many parties, who are thrown out of their Stocks by his failure. However this may be, the check to his career has a public place not unworthy of consideration.
